The statute allows for any non CA resident food distributor to avail himself to CA's court if there is a possibility that they caused an illness or death of a CA resident. A CA resident, could in theory, go to Beijing eat worm infested dog become severely ill and then file a suit in CA for getting sick. The statute does not limit its long arm statute to where the cause of action arose or even within the US. The counter argument, however, is that the CA Long Arm statute only applies within the boundaries of the US' Constitution (not linked) and these food distributors

What if a bar grader (San Francisco = where CA bar graded), were Chinese? Ck for me, but it's safest to make analogies "P.C."
